

Support from Wyatt, Riley, and the Collective Consciousness of the Children (CCC) By Suzy Miller

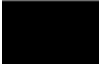

Welcome to a personal introduction to Riley, Wyatt, and the Collective Consciousness of the Children. As many of you have already heard if you have read my book, Awesomism A New Way to Understand the Diagnosis of Autism, Riley was the child who opened me to my own telepathic and multidimensional sight.

Looking back over the years, there is nothing that Riley told me that had not ultimately come to pass. He was truly a master, capable of reminding me of my mastery, and he can do the same for you! Riley can serve as your access to expanded consciousness through the Awesomism Process.

If Riley represents our expansion into the unknown, Wyatt represents the integration of the information found there. When I met Wyatt, he was three years old, diagnosed with Autism and non-verbal. I was working with him as his Speech Pathologist but by then my skills set allowed me to see and hear multidimensionally so I had a few more tools in my tool box.

I saw Wyatt twice a week and although he shared a few words here and there verbally, when he was painting there was really no functional verbal integration. Wyatt was not communicating telepathically with me initially, so supporting him was focused on helping him deal with his emotions.

© Copyright Suzy Miller and Blue Star Education and Research. This article is protected by the copyright laws of the United States and the Universal Copyright Convention. This material is provided exclusively for students of the Awesomism Practitioner Process and, as such, should not be distributed or in any way shared with others without the written permission of Suzy Miller.

After a few months of working with Wyatt, he showed up in my room at home through bilocation. Bilocation means that his light body or a lighter version of his physical form showed up at my house. On this occasion, he sat at the end of my bed and told me that he wanted to be fully integrated into his body. I was quite intrigued by this request as I knew that under the right circumstances I could help with this. I got the sense that, in this instance, Wyatt meant what he said, and that made me nervous for a variety of reasons. When I told Wyatt that I would help, he began to show me the series of energetic steps that would be necessary for him to fully integrate. As he was taking me through the process, I would become fearful that somehow his parents would associate him losing his diagnosis with me, and I did not want that. When I would go into fear, Wyatt would slip his energetic hand through my chest and hold my heart until I calmed down, and then he would give me more energetic steps to take to support his integration.

This whole process took about 45 minutes, and at the end of the session I told him that I was very concerned that he would actually up and be “just fine”. This made me nervous because I knew that if that happened his mother would be suspicious. He told me that he would take care of that. I did not want his integration to be associated with me because then other mothers would seek me out expecting the same result.

An experience like this cannot be duplicated because the only way a child will fully integrate is if it is part of his/her soul’s journey. No one can determine integration but we can support it.

Wyatt assured me that he would take care of his integration in such a way that I would witness it but not be overtly connected to it. The next time I saw him for a speech session, he had about twenty new words. The week after that, he had even more words, then a short phrase, and so it went, until exactly three months after Wyatt had bi-located to my room, he came into the clinic that I was working at and verbally spoke the words, “I’m here. I made it.” In that moment, I knew that what we had done had supported his integration, and that he would lose his diagnosis, which did indeed occur within a few short weeks.

When I asked Wyatt’s mother what she thought had happened, she said, “It was like he was from very far away and just decided that he wanted to live here.”

2

I tell you this story so that you understand that connecting with Wyatt can support you in integrating all that you have to remember, learn, and question through this process. Again, we can all gain access to lofty information but unless that information is integrated and actually changes our lives for the better, it is worthless.

So, Riley will help you expand, and Wyatt will help you integrate that expansion. What will the CC do for you? The CCC is a massive body of consciousness, so massive in fact, that it refers to itself as the new medicine, the new education, the new science, and the new foundation for relationship, parenting, and commerce.

So, you see, the CCC is your access point to your piece of the puzzle. We are all here to bring something unique into this world, and your interest in the CCC assures me that you are one of many who are bringing new states of consciousness to the human condition. We each have our own contribution to make, and the vast information held by the CCC requires that we all play our part in the creation of a new world.

Hopefully, this introduction will serve to get you excited about the possibilities that you are here to offer. Please listen to the Integration Session as Riley, Wyatt, and the CCC will connect with and support your expansion, integrations, and unique contribution.

3

